

THE PIECES OF HIS SOUL

George was a werewolf, one of the strongest and bravest. Every werewolf knew his name, some even trembled when they heard it.

George was feared and no one would have guessed that his weakness would be a simple human one. The fact that no one knew his weakness gave him the advantage to undertake the journey he had long wanted to do.

The trip consisted of distributing pieces of his soul that contained his memories in different parts of the world so that his love, Blue, would find them. George had been in love with said human for years but a werewolf was forbidden to establish a relationship with any human and if he did, he was sentenced to death, since a werewolf was unable to control its transformation in the human world, it was even capable of exterminating a population whole in the time that it is passing. If such a thing were to happen, both the army and the hunter would go out in search of each and every one of werewolves to exterminate them.

Finally, George knew that the moment he got rid of all pieces of his soul he would stop being a werewolf, so that the end of his trip he went to Blue's house and left a letter for her to find each piece and memories of George and thus knowing who would become her future husband.
